Excerpt: ... had quitted the habit of a monk, to resume that of a soldier, and paid himself with usury for the mortifications of a cloister, made a treaty with the king about that time. The duke of Nemours followed his example; but just as it was upon the point of being concluded, he died with vexation, f as some believe, for the bad success of so many great projects. Saint-Sorlin, his brother, continued the treaty for himself. The death of the duke of NeversJ delivered the king likewise from a troublesome and useless servant. Lastly, the duke of Maienne, now absolutely disgusted with the treachery Henry de Savoie-Nemours. f "He voided, by his mouth and pores, every drop of blood in his body." Perefixe, ibid. Cayet gives a very moving description of it, ibid. p. 519. J Louis de Gonzague died of a dysentery at IVesse in 1595, aged fifty-six, of chagrin, others say, because that when he talked with Henry IV, advising him with regard to Calais, this prince made answer, "How can you ad"vise me on this head? you who have never been nigher that town than "seven leagues." Though M. de Thou, liv. cxiii. and Brantome, tom. III. p. 259, very much extol him, the charge which the duke de Sully brings against him. of having been always a very expensive servant to his master, may be easily made out, even from this general's own letters to Henry I V» of which we have a collection in de Nevers's Memoirs, tom. II. p. 207, 376. "If your majesty," says he to him in one of his letters, "cannot or will not "come this length, I shall remove so far, that there will be no grounds to "expect any succours from me. In truth, sire, you did not make me re," turns suitable to the manner in which I serve you; and it appears to all "the world that you do not value me much.--J never was treated ...
