The Yellow Wallpaper (Annotated,Quotes) by Charlotte Perkins Gilman Charlotte Perkins Gilman "The Yellow Wallpaper" is a 6000 single by American writer Charlotte Perkins Gilman , first published in January 1892 in The New England Magazine short story. It is considered an important early work of American feminist literature , illustrating attitudes in the 19th century to the physical and mental health of women.

Presented in the first person , the story is a collection of stories written by a woman whose physician husband has confined her to the upstairs bedroom of a house he rented for the summer entries . It is forbidden to work and has to hide his diary with him, so she can recover from what he calls a " temporary nervous depression - a slight hysterical tendency , " a diagnosis common to women in this period. The windows of the room are small and there is a door at the top of the stairs , allowing her husband to control access to the rest of the house.

The story illustrates the effect of confinement on the mental health of the narrator and his intopsychosis descent . Having nothing to stimulate , she becomes obsessed with the model and color of the wallpaper. " It is the strangest yellow, that wallpaper It makes me think of all the yellow things I ever saw - . Not beautiful like buttercups , but old foul , bad yellow things But there is something else to About this document - the smell ... the only thing I can think of it as the color of the paper is a yellow smell ! .

Ultimately , she imagines there are women creeping around behind the patterns of wallpaper and comes to believe she is one of them. She locks herself in the room, now the only place where she feels safe , refusing to leave when the lease was in place. " To the outside , you have to crawl on the ground , and everything is green instead of yellow. But here I can glide smoothly on the floor, and my shoulder fits into the long kiss just in the wall , so I can not lose my way
