Darkness is growing within Anna Montagna and she can't control it. She's hurt someone that she loves. She fears that mental illness is descending upon her, like it did her mother, except her mother never hurt anyone. Scared and alone, Anna flees to small-town Mikamaw in Michigan's Upper Peninsula to save her family from the monster that she has become. Anna hopes to find anonymity and solitude in Mikamaw, but instead finds a slightly-psycho friend, nosy locals, and the healing nature of the landscape. Despite the hundreds of miles Anna travels to escape her past, it continues to haunt her. She tries to drown her life's regrets in alcohol and deep water, but they always resurface. When her husband and best friend find her in Mikamaw, she must decide whether to confront the past or turn and keep running.
